The Piano Shop on the Left Bank

With that, Paolo Fazioli struck the keys with both hands in the opening bars of Chopin's Polonaise in C-sharp Minor. The result was astounding: the volume was phenomenal and yet the clarity of tone was in no way compromised.

In the highly chromatic passages that followed, the shimmering tones hung in the air for what seemed an eternity as he added layer upon layer of resonance without its ever becoming indistinct or muddy. He was obviously a gifted pianist... he played part of a Mozart sonata, then some Schumann and a smattering of Liszt.

Each sounded different, yet they all shared a purity of tone that was as sharp as faceted stone. I put one hand on the cabinet of the Fazioli F308 concert grand as he played, and the vibrations passed through me like a controlled earthquake.
